How a young unknown made billions of dollars selling Skype. Twice! This is the inside story about Janus Friis, a young Dane, who came out of nowhere to create the internet icon Skype, and made billions of dollars selling the company, while on the run from high-priced lawyers and private detectives. In the end Janus Friis successfully fought off all competitors, detectives, lawyers and record executives and out of small loans from friends and family he and Niklas Zennström created Skype, the Internet phone company today used by millions of people everyday.
